THE ADVANCE GUARD.

And as we read the resounding rhyme, The reverent fancy hears The ghostly ring of the viewless swords. And the clash of the speciral spears.

We think, with imperious questionings, Of the brothers we have lost, And we strive to track in death's myster; The flight of each vallent shost.

The open heaven bent over them;
'Mid flowers their lithe feet trod;
Their lives lay vivid in light, and i

While the financial loss of France in th While the financial loss of France in the late Peris insurrection almost equaled that incurred by that country through the German invasion, the loss in human lives was compartively much greater. We have no exact figures of the French loss in the late war with Germany, but expect that the loss in kilfed and wounded was not much greater, if any, than that of the German armies, which footed up sitogether about one hundred and fifteen thousand in killed and wounded. The loss of the insurgents alone, however, by the lowest estimates, is placed at a hundred thousand, and members of the French Government have stated that not less than twenty thousand insurgents were killed during the capture of Paris, which exceeds the whole German loss in killed during the entire war. If we Paris, which exceeds the whole German loss in killed during the entire war. If we consider now that the Versailles troops also incarred a great loss, we are justified in placing the total loss of both paries above that of the French during their struggle with the German invaders, so that it appears the Paris insurrection, even in this pears the Paris insurrection, even in this point, inflicted as great, if not greater, losses on France than the conquest and devastation of a great part of the country

It will be seen that Mr. Brox is no better satisfied with that speech than we have been. Indeed, he is particularly severe have been. Indeed, he is particularly severe upon our Louisville orator and statistician, and, though he has endeavored to evoid being personal, he has not escaped the production of a very sharp and spicy letter. So much the better. That is what the people want. Bosh gentlemen deal with topics which are more or less dry and heavy, and by infusing a little spirit into the discussion it increases their chances into the discussion it increases their chances of being read. Purther, the topics they treat of are very live and extremely current topics. For that reason what they have to say ought to be all the more welcome to our readers, since here in Kontucky we are accused, and have always delivery remorals, or being too closely wedded to effect and obsolete issues, of wasting too much of our valuable time and thought upon ideas and concerns which are past and gone. NEEDHAM to give us his views of the tariff rom the standpoint of a revenue reformer but we hope the time come when he will feel licans of free-trade tendencies in their effor s at tailff reconstruction in the interests of justice, of revenue and of political econo-my; and meantime we shall never cease to regret that his relations with the present lministration have been of so se onfidential a character as to make him so in the financial and political situation a beautiful picture of justice and order, and to cause his tongue to utter only words of admitation and praise.

When Congress passes a voluminous and elaborate law, the main effect of which is to reduce revenue, Mr. NEEDHAM do claims, "Lot pehold how great a reduction of taxes." Again, as his eye falls upon a list of some two hundred articles relieved from all exection, he boosts of it as an example of patriotic legislation, entirely failing to see that the bulk of these ar-ticles would not yield duty enough to pay the cost of collecting it, and that many of ther cost of conceaning it, and that many of them, and there the most important, have been made ree in the interests of individ-uals, while the tax upon the finished ar-ticle of which these freed goods are the raw material has either been advanced or remains the same, thus enabling the manufacturer to produce his wares at a less cost with-out requiring him to make a corre-sponding reduction in his selling price. Analyze this free-list which Mr. NEEDHAM extols with so much patriotic pride, and it will be found that it abounds in frauds as we have described. frauds as we have described. The there no reduction on woolen goods, which, had they been made free, the loss of revenue would while the country would have been saved a tax of $70,000,000? And why, again, was not in reduced to the revenue-yielding point, instead of being left, as now, a source of trifling income to the treasury, and an enormous and crushing burden to every branch of Industry and trade? But we forbear; our space is not illimitable if Cruelty to Dogs.

An article in a Philadelphia paper, in which it was said that "as the heat of summer advances the danger from rabid dogs increases," has called forth from Miss fundamentally, he must consider it in its CAROLINE E. WHITE, President of the CAROLINE E. WHITE, President of the Woman's Branch of the Pennsylvania Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, an interesting letter on the subject of mad-dogs, and of dogs that are cruelly killed upon ill-founded suspicion that they are mad. The letter appears in the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin. Miss WHITE calls to the mind the fact that in the spring of last year a convention of the medical ntalize, just as its intelliof last year a convention of the medical profession throughout Europe was held at Paris, that all the newest discoveries of the eries in the disease called hydrophobia was when summed up: First, Hydro-phobia is a disease of very rare occurrence. Second, it is more common in winter than in summer. Third, the use of the muzzle is calculated to induce hydrophobia. Miss Warrs cites the fact also that in a lecture in Baltimore last summer a gentleman who had devoted much aftersion to this disease says "fits are a certain s'ya that hydrophobis does not exist in the animal saffering from them." Miss Wurrz edds "Now, "Mar egard to the first statement of the convention of phylicians in France, that hydrophobia is very rarely met with, we have abundant facts in our own experience." nave anemonst Locks in our own expendence to support that theory. The late President of the Gentlemen's Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, S. Monais Walls, examined the books of the Pennsylvania Hospital from the time of its foundation, about ninety years ago, to the present time, and, in the record of malediae which had existed there found maladies which had existed there, found maladies which had existed there, found one case of hydrophobia. The dog-catchers of our city, who are constantly coming into contact with the dogs, and who (before our society substituted nets for the lessoes is use for their apprehension) wave bitten every few days, sometimes in a very severe manner, never knew a case of hydrophobia among their number, nor was there ever even a report of such nature. Surely, if the bite of a dog is so exceedingly to be dreaded, there men who are bitten so often ought to experience the dire effects resulting therefrom. Then, in the name of justice and humanity, let this crussede against these unoffending animals cease." The dogs in all cities are very cruelly dealt with every summer. It is a cruelty which should no longer be permitted.

Mr. STRPPENS and Mr. TOOMIS, who, I'ke ROLAND and OSTANDO, have set out in quest of adventures, pg.in find themselves placed conspicuously before the country. Their resources, however, are materially dwindled and scattered. They so nd pledged to tear away the two last rescent the scent the resource of the resource that the resource the resource the resource the resource the resource the resource that the resource the resource the resource the resource the resource that the resource the resource the resource the resource that the resource the resource the resource that the resource that the resource the resource that the resource the resource that the resource that the resource the resource that the resour sore the people the original document, purged of its radic lism; but in this, as in wearing the boar's hide of the fable, the ques on is, how can the boar be scripped of it? The Northern people have to be induced to elect a Congress (avorable to the designs of the constitutional knightserrant; the Corgress so elected must be instructed in the method it is to pursue; the case thus made up is then to be carried before the people and submitted for re-heat'ng. Mr. Stephens is not a robust man, and Mr. Toomes is growing old. Will they live to see the end of the revo-

Will they live to see the end of the revolution they would inaugurate?

We apprehend that they will not. It is related that the genile Orlando was lost in the mists of Breton whilst seeking a golden apple that hung, like a star, on the edge of the horizon, ever receding as he followed it, and that the heroic Rolando fell into a pit, whither he had chased a dragon, and was devoured. Mr. Stephens, like Orlando, pursues a phantom. Mr. Toomse valor, like the valor of Sir Rolando curums his reason. To men who have been used to public displays—to whom popular applanes is as needful as the air—the tourney and the hunt for leadership and following may be in a measure pardonably tempting. But in this instance, it is most unwise, because in every way most unpractiwise, because in every way most unpractical. Mr. STEPHENS lacks the vigor and elen which are essential to the part he would fill at this late day, and Mr. Toomes was never anything but a destructive.
There was in their retirement, dignity.
There is, in their reappearance,
a certain boisterous and vu-

a certain boisterous and vu-sightly aspect which will de-prive them of that respect and confi-dence which old age should inspire. No man is made to lead two revolutions. Mr. STEPHENS and Mr. Toombs have had their time, and are as unfitted for the exigencies of the present generation as it is possible to conceive a couple not wholly bereft of reason and the gift of speech.

reason and the gift of speech.

They can not ask, they have no right to require, the young men of the South to stoop down and pick up the burden of their lives, to assume it as a part of the duty of to-day, and to wear it as a necessary expectage of the state. sary appendage of the future. The record of the great men who brought about our civil war and guided the hapless Confedcivil war and guided the hapless Confederacy to its doom, is made up. Echind that record the South cannot safely go; but, standing in front of it, ever ready to defend its purposes against the calcumnies of those who would wantonly drag it through the mire of partisan hate and sectional malignity, the Southern people should renounce all useless lamenting and empty sentimentalism, which tend, in our political and compercial pursuits to identify the new line with the old, and to press down the vitality of the present and next generation with the corpse of a fabric that was buried six

We are, in a manner, come to a new country, wherein we find many conditions that seem strange to us. Among those conditions the status of the negro that was a slave is strangest of all. That status was not fixed by us-but it is fixed. We cannot change it. Prudence may doubt whether, if we could, it would be wise to nake the attempt. But, in the absence of even a fair prospect, the enterprise which Mr. Stephens and Mr. Tooms would have us engage in, is but another desperate effort at revolution, to which we should bring, flot the eumulous strength of a fresh volition, and the vigor of an ardent hope, but the spent energies of defeat and the depressing i fluences of division among ourselves. The very discussion of the question brings up anew, with the story of our misfortunes, the spectacle of our helplessness, depriving us of the advantage, which we might se-cure, by those strong and active alliances f the enemy.

Nor is this the worst circumstance in the projected crusade. Having failed to defeathe amendments whilst they were befor the country, and when their teatures wer unfamiliar, and to that extent unpopular, it is proposed that we throw them out after they have gone into effect and grown com mon to the people, and this without any counter-plan to settle the question to be un-settled if the scheme succeeds. Mr. Tooms is but a sensational word-monger; but Mr. Stephens is a student, and his reading must teach him, if his philosophy does not, that parties seldom rise to power on mere negations. Granting the unwisdom of the Radical adjustment of the negro's state what has Mr. Stephens to offer in room of it after he has destroyed suffrage and civil rights? He must remember, in solving this problem, that his jury is composed of people who are satisfied with the present situation; of people who fought to bring it about and voted to bring it about, and did, finally, bring it about; of people who are not likely to rescind it unless they think they can get something better. He must ask himself also how the agitation he advises is going to affect the people of the South in their homes and fields and pockets. Then, having considered the matter tial part of every question in statesmanship.

The South is sick of windfalls, weary of mistaken prophets and wild promises. Its true manhood shrinks back from the child's play of those who merely cards the hope that we shall be able to lay out our own fortunes and the fortunes of the whole country with a rule made by our grandfathers to suit the needs of a generation but five millions strong and a an empire by the genius of steam, telegraphy, and immigration, nor altered in all its circumstances by the most gigant's revolution of modern times. The South wants colid performances rather than abstract speculations. We can get on with the Constitution, even as it is, fairly administrated by the production of the control of the Administration. instead of a revolution of the To construct, not to cast upon realities, and, by practical appli-ances, turn then to account; not to delude ourselves with visions or fright ourselves ourselves with visions or fright ourselves with specters, invite vs to the open field of matter-of-fact states manchip. The Paris Insurgents.

Ore of the great defects of penal colonies has always been the want of women.

The transported convicts who might have settled down in the distant countries settled down in the distant countries whither they were transported, and become good citizens and colonists, were unable to do so for want of wives. The female convicts eagerly "went off" as soon as they arrived in the penal colonies, it being the practice with some governments to set the convicts at liberty and even to give them land and the first start on condition of their marrying and settling as farm-ers in the colony. This defect will be remedied in a great measure in the French penal colonies in consequence of the late insurrection at Paris. The large numbers insurrection at rais. The large numbers of women who fought in the ranks of the insurgents or were captured in the heinous work of setting the nagnificent edifices of Paris on fire are mostly destined for transposition to the French penal-clony of New Caledoria in the Australian Aschipelego. An estimate of the numbers that we to be seat over can be formed from the fact that a first installment of two thousand five hurdred and sixty-three of these infamous women, the petrolcuses, was sent to Toulon a little while ago in order to be shipped to their place of exile in the Pacific. Other shipments are to follow, so that the convices will have plenty of women to choose

This transportation of the late insurgents and of their female accomplices is com-paratively but a very moderate punish-ment for the number and magnitude of their offenses. It is not near as harsh as a their offenses. It is not near as harsh as a term of imprisonment in one of our State prisons, and almost the only hardship sustained by the convicts is the separation and perfectual banishment from the country which they have struggled so hard to ruin. Those destined for New Caledonia are only the milder cases—the more guilty being transported to Cayenne and Lambessa, where the panel servinds is much barder. where the penal servitude is much harderand there New Caledonian convicts from the late insurrection will even then not be mingled with the common felons transcaptain in whom will be vested entire | Hotel and Restaurant, Fifth street, b

This will at once make the French colo y of New Caledonia one of the most im rtant of the Australian Archipelago, a he number of transported Parisians wil undoubtedly be very large; and as a very great part of this new increase of the pop-ulation of the island will belong to the female sex, there is a good prospect that the convicts may in course of time become good colonists and useful members of so-

What sort of people the decendants of these desperate men and women, a kind of cross between tiger and hyena, will be s hard to determ; ne but if they posses the characteristics of their parents the will certainly not be much better than the cannibal aborigines of the island. It is most doubtful, however, whether his mildness to the murderers and incen diaries of Paris will be productive of good results in France. While the extreme cruelty of the legitimist Generals directly after the capture of Paris chocked and embittered the population of the capital, this apparent solicitude of the Government to men and women as guilty and guillier than those who were macacred without judge or jury, seems to them othing but cowardice, and the spirit of insurrection, gaining strength thereby, will break out again at the first opport an's Annual Cycle Appetents Annual Cyclopedia for 1870.

D. Appleton & Co. have issued the tenth annual volume of the addends to their New American Cyclopedia; and we find it fully qual in value to any of its predecessors. It is marked by the same care and accuracy that is so noticeable throughout the series, and which render the work indispensable for every student and man of business who wishes to make and information upon almost every question, likerary, historical, or financial, that may arise. The volume before us is particularly valuable, for no secent period of time has witnessed events of so much importance as those which have occurred in Europe during the past year. We are not surprised to find in a work so able and scholarly a lucid explanation of all the triving European questions. The account great Valuem Council, the discoveries in schemes and set, and the geographical explorations of the year are all here recorded accurately and fully. There is an article upon Literature and Literary Progress in 1870 that cannot fall to be profitable and interesting to all who wish to know of the intellectual development of the country. In the fifty pages devoted to oblitancy notices the student will find a complete necrology of the year for the United States and foreign countries. It is almost impocable to open the book anywhere and not find something of interest and importance. The book is illustrated with maps, and also contains fine sited portains of General Robert F. Lee, General You Moltie and King Victor Ermonel. The one feature, however, that makes this volume unterly indispensable to all who have the other nine annual volumes, is the complete linker it contains to all the "snaural" hereinfore published. The work is so well and favorably known to all intelligent men, that it does not need any recommendation from us. We would simply call attention to the first that it is sold by subscription—only, and that Moses Warren, Chicago, Ill's is the poneral agent. Mr. D. Hoyle is the local agent for Louistile, and will doublices bring the book personnily to the knowledge of our citizens. ces bring the book personally to the

A Copperhead Killed.
Officer Bobert Seay, of the county police, had somewhat of a narrow escape yesterday from possible desth. He, with another member of the force, was climbing over a fence, near the Masonic Widows' and Orphans' Home, on Third street, and within a mile of the business heart of the city, when he heard a peculiar noise in the grass before him. Within a few feet was a large smake, coiled ready for a spring with forked tongue projecting and tail whirring in an ominous manner. Pulling his gistol Mr. Seay shot the animal directly through the neck, killing it instantly. It was found to be a copperhead of the most venomous order and measuring a little over two feet and a half in length. The stomach bulged out with a meal of several freigs probably just swallowed. The copperhead is a reptile almost if not quite as dangerous as the rattlesmake, and this is said to be the first found in this vicinity for years.

by the hour with his odd stories and byfalulin expressions, interspersed at call with stadds of from every popular song of the day, and many of the German waitzes. He is a genulus after his fashion, and if you eare enough for fun to invest in thirty cent's worth of tanglefoot for him, he will amuse you with a specimen. Charley is something of an institution after the manner of his namesake of Artesian Well fame. You can't mistake him, and it is worth your while to stop him when met.

SOUR GRAPES.

We take pride, we rejoice in the glowing terms in which the Louisville Commercial sees fit to speak of the Courier-Journal Base Ball Nine. To the Commercial is the honor due of placing the Courier-Journal Nine where it justiy be-longs. Henceforth the Courier-Journals are the Courier-Journal Nine where it justly belongs. Henceforth the Courier-Journals are blazoned to the world along with the Haymakers. White Stockings. et 4d eme genus, as a renowned, unconquerable set of professionais. The Courier-Journal Nise, until the notice of their achievements in yesterday's Commercial, here not their own greatness, but, realizing the fact that it is even so, no longer will petty trimupha over local clubs satisfy their vaulting ambition. The Commercial, for the sake of "our victories," has gone too far. Henceforth the Courier-Journals disdain to meet only amaleurs; and now, even white we write, the question is being canvassed, "When shall the Courier-Journals start on a tour to combat their professional brethern of the West and Rast, and thus meet foemen worthy of their steel?" There are, however, a few points in the Commercials over their crowing and blowing about the victory over the Commercial always "was generous over their victories—decidedly so—never double-headed, crowed, and bugled." Now, we will see how this is. If memory serves us correctly, the victory of the Commercials over the Courier-Journals and the following heading: "Anoreus Verroary ros true 'Verrouvous' Now. "Io Tauturpus."
